Market overview

- The US Federal Reserve (Fed) dropped the overnight rate by another 25 basis points in December, taking the rate down to 4.50%. The accompanying statement expressed a shift in the pace of further easing from the committee. Stronger economic data, coupled with the potential inflationary impact of the new administration policies on trade and immigration lead the committee to reduce the amount of rate cuts to 50 basis points in 2025, from 100 in the previous meeting. The Bank of Canada (BoC) cut the overnight rate by another 50 basis points, as concern about economic growth persist.
- The move down in yields we saw in November was quickly reversed as markets got more clarity as to President Trump’s willingness to enact quick legislation with regards to trade and immigration policies. Impositions of tariffs on trading partners, coupled with deportation of illegal immigrants has increased the probability of a new wave of inflation. The 10 year note increased by close to 40 basis points to 5.57%. Canadian yields’ reaction was more muted, increasing by about 20 basis points.
- Domestic corporate spreads performed well during the month as markets expect corporate profits to rise under the new administration. The search for yield also favors corporate bonds, as shown by the strong demand for new issues. Global credit underperform as market still are uncertain as to the effects of tariffs on global trade.
- As yields moved up quite dramatically in December, strategies with a longer duration such as the CIBC Canadian Bond Fund underperformed. Global strategies, such as the Global Bond Private Pools and the CIBC Global Credit Fund showed negative performance under the current environment. Shorter term strategies with a focus on domestic assets such as the CIBC Alternative Credit Strategy had a good month.
- No major change in asset allocation was executed after the defensive stance taken in November. Even though the increase the CIBC Canadian Bond Fund might have been somewhat early, the decrease in international exposure toward shorter domestic strategies showed quite timely.
